In this Photoshop Elements tutorial, I show you how to create a grunge-style image using brushes, layer styles and many editing techniques. Note: This tutorial requires you to have basic skills in using Photoshop or Elements. I cover the basic basics of how to use layers, path, paint brushes, create custom brushes, create a new layer, adjust layer opacity, change fill and stroke styles, create layers from paths, duplicate layers, use duplicate layer masks, how to work with Smart Filters and many more.

1. Create a New Document and Open Photoshop Elements First, click the New Document icon on the Photoshop Elements desktop. This will open a new document in your default software. On the left side of the Photoshop Elements desktop is the layers palette. To create a new document, click the icon at the top of the palette. This will open a new document for your project. The default document settings include an art board sized 857x578 pixels at 72 dpi (dots per inch) and a CMYK color setting. If you are not familiar with CMYK color mode, don't worry. See the next step. Now click the white square icon at the top left corner of the layers palette to get the color picker. This will open the color window. Click the White color on the color picker to select White as the foreground color. Click the black square to select black as the background color. Click the gray square to select grayscale as the color mode. For the size of your document, click the 125% icon or choose a larger size. For the number of colors, choose either 256 or 256.
2. Create a New Layer Now, go to the layers palette on the left side of the Photoshop Elements desktop. Click the first icon on the left side of the palette to get the layers palette. Click the New Layer icon at the bottom of the palette. With the layer palette still open, click the white square to start the color picker. What's New in the?

The software publisher of the controversial virtual world Second Life said today it is creating a new network to simulate the real world. The news could signal an end to the splintering worlds of Second Life and DarkPlace, two competing communities that have operated under the aegis of Linden Labs, the provider of the $2.1 billion software. “The SecondLife platform is about to become a new platform: a new platform for new and innovative social networking and communication,” SecondLife parent company Linden Lab said in a statement today. SecondLife — which allows users to control what they are wearing, what they are talking about, their avatars, and even how they move around their three-dimensional virtual home — has been very slow to evolve. Some people in the community think the game is slowing down, or has lost its appeal. But the 2 million or so users of Second Life have been steadfast in their dependence on Linden Labs, whose servers are powered by the popular “prime” service — meaning many people visit the virtual world and interact with it each day. Linden Lab's second try at a social network platform has been encouraging so far, but developers say the company's plans don't look like much more than an updated version of its original avatar-based social network. As to why it took the company so long to start work on a "real" world version of the virtual social network, a well-placed developer said that rather than Linden Lab simply imitating its original avatar-based platform, it has a plan that will make a virtual world look more like the real world than avatars have thus far. It's a wild thing to say, but I don't think Second Life needed a "real world" version. People never went there to sit on the couch - they went to meet and interact with friends and do business or teach. I still remember trading virtual Comic Books and Crayola crayons in the 90's. The entire purpose of Second Life, to me, was for people to meet in large groups and socialize. I don't think that people are dying for a virtual world that looks like a real world. I think that the virtual world appeal has been magnified too much in today's world and I think that people have gotten a little desensitized and are using it much like a Facebook. I think the Second
