Racing angle is an action game where you need to drive your car through the level avoiding collisions and making the most out of your time, by staying out of danger, boosting and using tools to get the best possible speed. Rules and restrictions: This is a very simple game, but it is still a game, so we expect players to obey the following rules: This is an action / platform game, you are expected to use the camera angles to control where you drive, you can't jump or drive faster than you intended, it's a racing game, not driving school. The best is achieved when you try your best and don't brake or feel frustrated. You can use tools to help you drive faster, you can use boost to jump higher, you can use a parachute to jump from the level to another, you can use a net to let you jump through levels on a higher level. The speed is measured in mega meters (1 million) and it is up to you how fast you drive, if you are good enough you will get to the end of the level as quickly as possible. You can use the gamepad (joystick) to control your car, the left stick controls your forward motion and the right controls your backwards motion. You can use tools from the left side of the screen to slow you down (slow motion is not used to extend the time, it is for keeping your camera speed constant). You don't need to worry about the gaps between the levels, they are just speed bumps, with this genre of game you won't make much of a difference between the levels. You can use the cheat to skip a level or speed up your time, we don't tell you what to do, this is a game, take it easy and enjoy. You can save games, but in order for it to count for sure we ask that you don't save it if you are stuck in a tricky part, it is a game, you can't save everything, sometimes you need to brake to avoid a fall. It is a racing game, if you want to download a racing game similar to Racing angle, you might be interested in Download: Max Burnout 2.0 Racing 3. What's new in Cardseer:

: An RPG Board Game in the 1990s I had always wondered how Cardseer came into existence. Richard Harland, a sales director at AdvancedELS in Hertfordshire, used to tell me in the late 1990s that he and his partner used to play in the back room of his games warehouse, a room full of new games lying on boxes in stacks, and that they would try to "create" them. I didn't quite understand how they could create something out of nothing, but this was also long before Internet gaming started up and Richard and his colleague were in charge of purchasing board games from the EU and importing them into the UK. It's a hobby thing, he told me, and they had a lot of ideas but no real plans to develop them. Richard was always trying to find ways of combining games that he had bought, but never getting anywhere as the concept of "aggregation" as a form of gaming is something new to me. And Cardseer was always in the back of his mind (and perhaps several others) but he never made it until he and his partner were hired by the Edinburgh Games store and they were there to start a new business. Cardseer was Richard had purchased hundreds of games at the Lilliputian Arts Show in the UK in 1989, and then moved on to trading shows in other parts of the EU where he met game manufacturers that had been after him for years, who were desperate to get his business to market. The Lilliputian Arts Show was "just a gaming show" in Hertfordshire one year when Richard was there, he told me. It wasn't organised or set up like the big national shows in London with big prizes, but Richard thought it was more "down to earth" than the big shows, and what is often suggested to small game companies is that it is more fruitful. And he was right. Years later Richard attended the RSCG show in Germany, where he met a number of major games publishers and tried to gather heads of companies together, but it didn't quite come off (and he is still thinking about Cardseer, as it was an idea that really started out from the back of his mind and, once he knew what he had, he thought it should be brought to light). Richard and his partner were moving gaming into a new direction, and Cardseer was a reflection of that. Richard knew several boardgame designer friends who had recently started

You might be surprised to find out that even the Apple Watch is now offered with a dye-free battery option. The alternative comes courtesy of a new collection of bands from the linkup of some of the company's most loyal accessory makers, the Gruber and Neulink fit. For three years, Apple has sold the Apple Watch without a single band option. If you didn't want to cover the shiny steel band with a complimentary watch, you were out of luck — some of the most popular bands and straps on the market cost a pretty penny. Luckily, that's changed. The Gruber Apple Watch bands start at $49 and offer special padding to make your Apple Watch case even more flexible. The bands come in a stylish array of colors, including black, gray, forest green, shade grey, stone, sky blue, white, and rose gold. If you want a completely different look, you can head to Gruber's website, where you can mix and match band options with a wide selection of straps. The
