Reviews Rated 5 / 5 stars2018-10-07 10:59:56 Amazing! I'm really, really enjoying this series! As far as I know, it's not been touched by that 0 other developer who's been trying to take the reigns of the farming world. and now it's being done by you. The gameplay is as good as all the others, with the addition of being able to play by yourself. Heck, it even does a good job of introducing animals you need to buy for your farm (even though the game is somewhat a bear for me to make money for). I think you need a friend to play this with, but it's probably the best thing to do in that case. I also love how everyone was so nice to each other, but I can't say I loved the story, when the other two games had two main antagonists and some less malicious, if really short lived, villains, you have a universe that has no real structure or ground to stand on, just those characters in a farm. This is well done, but it felt like something wasn't right. I wish it was more organized or something, but I think the farm animals and some of the items were good. I really like farming games, and this one does have a good flow to it, so if you're a fan, give it a try. It's no Spector's quest, and I think this is an improvement d41b202975

Thursday, 9 June 2015 The writing group at Boutique Cardmaking Design had a brilliant time last week in 3D. It was set in the middle of an ice block, and inside, the students explored the characters and situations unfolding in "the town that will not die". "M." drew the floor plans, and "Bianca" created the ice floor. Furnace Fans drawn by "Shelly" and Heels created by "Clyde" The play started off with the arrival of "Three". He heard that the kids in "There-We-Are" had gotten into trouble, and "Lit" decided to babysit them while "Clyde" made a new friend. Their encounter with "Barbie" was awkward and uncertain, but eventually, “Three” decided to stay... and everyone took their seats for the play, waiting for the opening line. Then, two anonymous strangers were sent by “Some-where-in-the-Sea-to-Waiter-Sam”. The strangers had some goods to sell, and they had a very unusual way of doing so. “Clyde” and the strangers decided to wait inside the fetid refrigerator, and “Barbie” used his products to make some improvements that he suggested on the strangers’ home. The strangers returned with their products ready to be sold; but “Lit” was not happy with them because she was afraid they were fake. She had a performance at school that she was trying to pull off, and she wanted the producers to play on the right sound. The strangers were confused, as one of them commented, “So how did we sell our goods, when our house was so close to the beach?” “Clyde” said, “Duh! They had things that helped them make things out of ice and puddles! Everyone knows that they were selling ice and puddles.” Finally, “Lit” suggested that he sell ice buckets from the house for so much, “one dollar for a bucketful.” If he had a bucketful, he could sell them for a dollar. Everyone agreed, and the strangers could sell their great products. A deal was struck,
