As the amount of data collected from player movements, tackles, aerial duels and on-ball actions is unprecedented, we felt the amount of data and the potential for improvement over gameplay was as large as its own game physics engine. With this in mind, we set out to create a brand new game engine, based on the new features and gameplay styles that FIFA 22 will require. This included new AI, goalkeeping and improved player simulation to make the on-ball play that is at the heart of FIFA finally in reach of all players. The HyperMotion engine employs very efficient particle systems, using advanced raycasting and dynamic occlusion shadow mapping. At the same time, this work also greatly benefits from our state-of-the-art software and tools development and optimization skills on the FIFA World Team front. The official FIFA server uses the same engine, and we are now able to share more of our technical insights with our developers than ever before. The FIFA World Team has grown to include hundreds of talented developers, over 150 of which are software engineers. This core team is about to take on two key new challenges with FIFA 22. The first is to introduce HyperMotion Engine to the FIFA World Team, and the second to be involved in the various gameplay experiments taking place in parallel to the development of FIFA 22. Our World Team engineers have been working hard on the new software and tools, and our future plans for each of the specific areas are listed below. It goes without saying that we will be sharing all the new developments and thoughts with our community of developers, fans and FIFA players in the months and years ahead as we continue our journey together. UI We are investing a lot of time in improving our AI and logic code, reducing bugs and increasing gameplay experience. For example, we optimized the AI pathfinding system to allow it to handle slight changes in the geometry of the stadiums. However, the biggest area of development for our World Team developers has been our tools and our UI editors. We have invested heavily in working with developers to get their needs met, and we are on the way to a solution for the tools they are using. AI Our AI tools have been overhauled and tweaked for multiple important aspects. First, we have significantly improved the speed and update frequency of the AI agent life cycle. Second, we now have better tools to extract life-cycle data from agents, so that our AI engineers can examine the behaviour and underlying mechanics better.
