Directed by Apoorva Lakhia. This is the story of the slightly-less-notorious sister of a wife .Why Violets? Violets have a deep impact on our overall well being. The scent of violets is released upon inhalation, the odor is nonirritating, and the flowers are scentless when picked, yet they produce a tonic fragrance at the moment of picking. The physical action in the case of the leaves is to be pulled, and the scent disappears with this action. However, the flowers are naturally picked and left at their peak. Violets are classified as an aromatic annual plant, meaning they are perennial but grown as annuals. They grow between twenty inches to a foot tall, and have strong root systems. They are fast to grow, requiring only 12-18 in of light (and less during the summer). They are typically a fresh plant, and tolerate a variety of soil and weather conditions. Violets and Health We can see our violets grow for twelve to eighteen months, and then come to their full size in only one month. They can produce over 2,000 seeds per plant. The seeds are winter hardy, and they germinate in the spring. The plant's outer leaves bear an oval shape that is bright green, while the veins are pale green. The thick leaves are covered by a grayish-green leaf, with a few thistle-like bristles on its stems. Violets have a long history in relationship to health. Pliny the Elder was the first to attest to their medicinal use. He wrote, "For a large fire of violets fills the lungs with a more pleasant odor than almost any other plant." The physicians of the time taught that it was the best remedy to keep in contact with the lungs. In the past few decades, there has been increased interest in the health benefits of violets. They have a strong
