Given the need to facilitate the increased global exchange of science, technology, engineering and mathematics (STEM) experts, the framework proposes a range of programs/projects to be funded by the US federal government and by the International Science Foundation (ISF). SII will focus on developing "international partnerships to develop a global network of institutions and individuals able to advance scientific and technological research and its translation, and its application in addressing the challenges of the 21st century" [1]. The framework spans two issues: how to encourage and support scientific exchange, and how to develop an effective mechanism for accessing funding and partnering on those exchanges. The latter is addressed in the framework's proposals for a "dedicated global pool of funding to support international partnerships in science and technology".Q: 1cdb36666d
