How to use Google Cloud Endpoints in iOS Swift? I am a beginner to Google Cloud Endpoints, and have been trying to follow the source code provided by Google in the following link After putting this in my Podfile: pod 'Google/Endpoints' pod 'Google/Endpoints/AppEngine' I was able to download and build a sample project with the following link: This project uses Objective-C. Is there any way to do the same with Swift? A: Just put a new file named cloud_api_demo_endpoints.swift in the project's directory and add import AppEngine. Then try the sample project again. Update: Since the introduction of Swift 4.0, Cloud Endpoints are now in beta. This new version supports using Google's latest SDK in Swift 4. The link to the guide you've mentioned is a good starting point. A: Thanks for the fast reply. I did try your answer. But some parts of your sample project showed a long source code that was very hard for me to understand. If you don't mind, I want to send you an e-mail to explain to me how to do that in a easy way. A: Swift4 there are out now support for Cloud Endpoints. I've taken a look at the example that you've used and found that the sample code is extremely condensed and it provides a way to just quickly get the services working and not following the whole Endpoint's docs. If you run the example with your xcode project you will get something that looks like this: Now, you only have to do is look at the link that provides you with all the annotations that you'll need for your app. The present invention is directed to a video encoder and decoder and, more specifically, to a video encoder and decoder which has a high compression ratio. De Facto Divorce This blog post was written by Sharon Binder, Ph.D., L.SW. You may know that I'm a quadriplegic. I'm a wife, daughter, sister, and friend. I'm also a social worker. One question I hear a lot is how disabled people can live with, or leave, a married partner. De Facto Divorce is not an easy topic, but it is an important one. On January 31, 2018, L.A. County Superior Court Judge David S. Chung approved the settlement of a case involving my husband, Dennis Hucker. I am not a party to this settlement. We were married for 20 years, and are still married. Dennis and I are planning to live together. In a de facto divorce, there is a legal or official marriage that is recognized, but it is not a "real" marriage. This is a big problem in a non-legally binding state like California. People in de facto relationships are unable to get things that they can have with a legal partner, such as joint use of property, shared healthcare and tax benefits. However, these same de facto agreements do not give legal status to one partner but to the other. What Is a De Facto Relationship? The difference between a de facto marriage and any other type of marriage is that a true marriage is based on the following, 1) Both persons are adults. 2) Both persons are legally able to marry. 3) Both persons are in agreement that they want to be married. 4) Both have signed official legal paperwork
