The French legend of 6th century Gaul, France, Charlemagne, Louis.The invention relates to a method for the production of a water-swellable clay gel slurry. It is known to produce water-swellable clay gels by subjecting a clay having a water content of at least 30%, a fine particle size distribution, a high level of specific surface area, a high degree of hydration and a viscosity of at least 1000 cP (centipoise) and preferably 2 to 5 million cP, to a thermal treatment at a temperature from 120.degree. to 250.degree. C. A particular advantage is given to this thermal treatment by the fact that the hydration of the fine particles remains intact and their viscosity is so increased that
