on the screen. Unfortuntely, I.S.Q: Is ssh-agent a linux (ubuntu 14.04) service or is it a daemon? I'm trying to do some of the ideas from this blog post, where the author mentions using ssh-agent. But ssh-agent is not listed as a service in 14.04, as demonstrated here. According to this link, it is a known service name. I see the name in systemctl list-unit-files | grep ssh-agent.service So I am wondering what is the correct term to use here. But I am using 14.04, and I am not sure if this is just a service name that varies between older and newer versions of ubuntu? A: Typically, you invoke the ssh-agent from SSH sessions. You can also run a helper program to invoke the agent. (Remember to use it with -t, to tell it not to exit!) To do it in your terminal, use eval'ssh-agent -s' You can also invoke the agent using ssh-add -D (as per c6a93da74d
